SUMMARY

I am a final-year PhD candidate, Teaching & Research Assistant at the Department of Political Science, Trinity College Dublin. My research interests include gender and ethnic relations, civil-military relations, and colonial legacies. I am experienced in conducting qualitative and quantitative research, with a particular focus on interviewing and fieldwork. As my PhD dissertation submission approaches in September 2024, I am seeking position as postdoctoral researcher, research assistant, or adjunct lecturer.

EDUCATION

09/2020-09/2024 (EXPECTED) PHD IN POLITICAL SCIENCE TRINITY COLLEGE DUBLIN

- Dissertation Essays on the Impact of Conscription on Marginalized Groups is supervised by Dr Jesse Dillon Savage. The project examines the impact of gendered conscription on ethnic minority women in the militarised context of ethnic conflict; the implications of conscription for gender equality; prevailing colonial legacies through the analysis of ethnically selective conscription practices. Combines case study and global comparative analysis; employs qualitative and quantitative methodologies; involves original qualitative interview data collected during fieldwork in Israel/Palestine in 2023.
- Completed 90 ECTS courses covering research design, research ethics, qualitative and quantitative research methods, interviewing, gender, political behavior, international conflict, and Middle Eastern politics.
- PhD funded by the Provost PhD Award, with fieldwork financed by the TRiSS Postgraduate Research Fellowship.
